The AFP548.com staff will be hard at work at the MacWorld IT conference next week. As usual we will not only be reporting on any server related news, but teaching all week long at the MacIT Conference as well. This event has continued to get better every year and this year should be no exception.

With literally some of our readers there we hope to be able to meet a few in person.

Read on to see where you can find us.

Document Management in the Fresh Air

Installing Alfresco to create workflows and manage your documents

Alfresco is a fun open source project that I've been playing around with lately. It's similar to EMC's Documentum, which if you've never played with allows you to create workflows for documents. It's billed as a "content management solution" but that term is very overloaded with all the web CMS systems out there. For those of you still confused, it allows you to manage all of your documents, such as MS Word files and such, and create workflows with them.

For example you could create a workflow that takes a new logo design, requires that a few people sign off on it, then the logo is converted into a PDF and e-mailed to a client. That kind of content management.

The install is easy enough but there are a few things to keep in mind.

Hi guys got a l'il problem I need some advice on.

I am currently going through the process of binding several Macs to a Test AD environment but have run into an annoying issue.

We don't use the AD Container "Computers" for binding machines to the domain. Instead we have a Container called "Test Computers" within which is 3 folders: Desktops, Laptops & Macs.

No I can get the Macs to bind to the domain & create themselves in Test Computers, but not Test Computers\Macs…

Any ideas?

[quote]You don't have rights to that then.[/quote]

I have full admin rights to the AD Domain. So I should have rights.

The AD Plugin just advises that it cannot find the container.

[quote]The AD plugin shouldn't have any issues with putting accounts way deep into other places.[/quote]

So for CN= should I just put in the container name? i.e. Macs & not something like CN=Test Computers/Macs?

[quote]what's the CN that you're using?[/quote]

The CN that works is the defualt one, CN=Computers.

Which is fine for the test rig, but when this goes live it needs to be in LBTH Computers\Macs, (\ is used to illustrate folder location).

Any ideas how I can create them in LBTH Computers\Macs via the AD Plugin?

Quark 7 install issues

Posted: 16/06/08 at 04:16 by bentoms

Hi Guys,

Hope you can shed some light on a install issue I am having.

I've created a quark install image in composer by creating the before & after snapshots.

The install is for Quark 7.2 PPC, when running the install through Casper it takes about 15 seconds then it says that the install is successful. But nothing is installed!

The install CD is universal binary but the snapshot is taken from a PPC mac, which is why I specified the build as PPC. I have disabled our AV on the Macs I have tested this with (our AV is Symantec Corporate Edition). All Macs are running 10.4.11.

Any ideas?

Regards,

Ben Toms
